A YELLOW ROSE.

BY MARGARETTA M. MORLEY.

"Have you seen the mountain yet?" asked an old resident of a bevy of pretty girls as they stood on the piazza of the Hotel Tacoma.

Each pretty girl answered with a groan. "No, indeed!" exclaimed one of them. "We have been imprisoned in Tacoma nine days, too, yet not an inch of the mountain have we seen. There seems to be some fatality about it, for no sooner does a Raymond and Whitcomb party strike the town than old Tackhammer, as a Puyallup editor has dubbed it, sees fit to hide its head."

"I have begun to question whether there really is any mountain there," observed a tall, fair girl with wistful blue eyes, "and whether you imaginative people have not mistaken a cloud for a mountain at some early period and lived in the delusive glory of it ever since? At Seattle, they say, there is a Mount Rainier, but no Tacoma; while at Tacoma they never heard of Mount Rainier. What is one to think? Now we have been stalled here almost two weeks by the floods and disabled railroads, as the girls have just said, and, although the sun has shone often during this time, that gray curtain in the south has never lifted. It is very odd!" All eyes were fixed on the distant cloud bank and the girl with the wistful eyes continued, dreamily: "It resembles our ambitions, our dearest hopes; success is there—always there—yet the intervening clouds are so dense that at times—" She stopped abruptly, confused by the earnestness of her own voice.

"Who is that girl?" demanded the old resident, turning, with some curiosity, to watch the slender figure. "I did not catch the name as we were introduced. Is she one of your party?"

"Yes, she is a Raymond. She and her father went through the Yosemite valley, and also to Alaska with our excursion; so, you see, we are well acquainted," replied one of the pretty girls. "Her name is Rose—Rose Monroe, and she is ever so nice."

"You have a pleasant party?"

"Oh, yes, indeed, perfectly lovely! And we don't mind being delayed here one bit, for Raymond and Whitcomb pay all our expenses during the detention and we have no end of fun. Only, of course, it would be more exciting if there were some young men."

"Of course," agreed the old resident, with a smile. "But there is a rather nice-looking man now—sitting by the window. Is he not of your party?"

"Where? Oh, yes, I see whom you mean!" enthusiastically. "That is Mr. Emerson Dwight; he is from Boston, and he is perfectly dear! Did you ever see such a handsome profile? Look at his hands—are they not dreams of symmetry? And such hair—that soft, brown wave in it is absolutely perfect!"

The old inhabitant was heartily amused.

"I am glad you like your traveling companion so well," he remarked; and was then puzzled by a dissenting shake of the head from the very girl who had been sounding the young man's praises.

"Like him? We don't like him," she explained. "We don't know him—he's from Boston!"

"Oh!"

"Yes, he is awfully exclusive—no, not that exactly, but—well—indifferent. His manners are perfect, so he is always scrupulously polite to us, only he doesn't care a pin about us. See? The only girl he has anything to do with is Rose Monroe. In his cold and formal fashion, he is very nice to her."

"Do you know, I think he is very much taken with her," volunteered the youngest of the group, who at once became the target of many scornful glances. "I do, indeed! He talked with her for hours at a time going up to Alaska, and," triumphantly, "he is now holding the rosebud to his lips which she put in his buttonhole this afternoon."

The unconscious subject of their remarks was sitting at a small table under the window, absently twirling by its long, slender stem a beautiful yellow rose. From time to time he inhaled its delicate perfume, or, as the romantic maid interpreted the action, pressed the flower to his lips. Presently he commanded a bell-boy to bring him a glass of water. He drank of it, and then, to the horror of his little audience, laid the drooping rosebud across the piece of crystal ice that almost filled the glass, and, lighting a cigar, prepared himself to read.

"There is sentiment on ice for you, warranted not to melt!" cried the pretty girls, mockingly, and the little romancer felt utterly crushed.

Night crept in over the sound. The gray-curtained cloud which concealed the mountain turned to black, and one by one the tourists disappeared.

Rose Monroe was the last to leave the piazza. Her companions had passed her unnoticed, as she stood in the shadow of the house, and she made no effort to detain them, for her heart was heavy and she longed to be alone—alone with that black curtain that separated her from success. Was it there?

Strolling to the window, to see if her father was still in the office, she stumbled against a table standing near, and the musical clink of ice against glass attracted her attention. She smiled bitterly as she perceived the fragile yellow rosebud on its frozen bed, and then, throwing herself in the chair Emerson Dwight had occupied a short time before, stroked the yellow petals with a caressing hand. He had left his book, a handsome volume of Poe's poems, open on the table with a pencil and a sheet of paper folded between the leaves. Her restless fingers sought them out, and presently she began to write:

Sweet yellow rose, that in thy chalice curled
Holds a dear secret all too tightly furled,
Lift, but one instant, thy delicious head
That I may read the message none have read.
Let this warm air, and warmer still caress
That on thy petals now with zeal I press,
Open them wide, until the truth be freed,
Of which I long have felt a bitter need.
May the soft wish, that fervently I breath
O'er thy cold bed, around thy bosom wreath
A gentle warmth, suffice to break the spell
Which holds you fast, where love can never dwell.
'Tis vain I plead! cold petals like a shield
Close o'er thy heart, and keep its secret sealed.

Then, having read her hastily written verses, she twirled them around, with a swift smile of derision, and scrawled across the full length of the sheet:

L'ENVOI.

Alas, sweet rose, you have no voice!
You are—a yellow rose on ice.

Pushing the book away with a gesture of impatience, she bowed her head upon her arm and fell into a reverie, from which she was only startled by voices in the office. Realizing, all at once, that the hour was late, she arose hurriedly from her chair; and the impromptu verses never again occurred to her mind until she was brushing out her long yellow hair before the mirror in her own room.

There was no doubt that when Emerson Dwight recovered his book he would find the lines, and it was equally certain that, finding them, he would at once recognize the author by the handwriting, and— She waited no longer to pursue this horrid possibility, but, twisting her long hair into a hasty knot, prepared to go downstairs. The verses must be regained at any cost!

Late as it was, a few men still sat smoking and chatting in the office. Passing them as quietly as possible, Rose stepped out on the piazza and was immediately filled with consternation to find two figures bending over the fatal table. One was Mr. C——, the conductor of the excursion; the other, Emerson Dwight.

There was no mistaking the handsome profile and finely-turned head silhouetted against the lighted window. The girl's heart gave a bound. How long had Mr. C—— been with her friend? was the momentous question which confronted her. While they were together Emerson Dwight was not likely to open his book, so there were nine chances to one that he had not discovered her paper.

"Pardon me, Mr. Dwight, but I carelessly left a paper in your 'Poe' while glancing it over this evening; may I trouble you for it now?" Rose wondered at the coolness of her own voice as she waited, all tremblingly, for the reply. Mr. C—— glanced at her in some surprise and offered her a chair as he exclaimed:

"What! Is it you, Miss Rose? Well, you are one of the lucky few who can afford to lose your beauty sleep."

Locked once more in her own apartment, Rose Monroe threw herself in a chair with many smothered exclamations of relief.

"May I never be tempted to write poetry again!" she ejaculated, fiercely. "If all the would-be rhymsters were punished as severely as I have been during the suspense of the last half hour, the reading public would be delivered of much trash. Oh, thou yellow rose, why wast thou not born a thistle?"

She unfolded the paper with a tragic air, and was about to re-read her lines, when the mocking smile on her lips gave place to a look of blank amazement.

Instead of her address to the rose, the paper contained some lines in Emerson Dwight's well-known writing. She read:

"The secret, lady fair,
That my poor petals hold
I'll give to thee with joy,
If I may be so bold.

"Thy warm and sweet caress
Gives joy and hope and life;
With passion's warmest flow
My withered leaves are rife.

"Ah, hold me to your lips!
My perfume lives again;
And in your soft eyes' light
Forgotten is all pain.

"The secret's told; I'm sure
Your eyes have read it true.
My perfume holds one dream—
That, lady fair, is you.

L'ENVOI.

"If cold on bed of ice I lie,
'Tis that my memories may not die."

The L'Envoi was scrawled across the page just as hers had been, and the whole paper resembled hers so closely that it was small wonder she had been deceived in it at first glance.

So Mr. C—— had not been with Emerson Dwight during that fatal interval, and he had had time to open his book! What must he think of what he found there? Rose lost herself in a maze of doubt, and fell to sleep murmuring: "'Forgotten is all pain.'"

The next morning Emerson Dwight appeared at breakfast with a yellow rose in his buttonhole.

"I believe that rose is artificial," sang out Mr. C—— from an adjoining table, "for it seems as though you had worn it a week. The florists out here can't understand their business, to put such everlastings as that on the market."

"I have a method, all my own, for keeping it fresh," answered Dwight, with a grave inclination of the head toward his vis-a-vis. "Miss Monroe is in the secret, and can divulge it if she likes." Rose blushed furiously.

After breakfast, Dwight asked her to walk with him on the piazza. She acquiesced, and they lingered a long time at that farther end where the pet bear is chained.

They were finally interrupted by one of their traveling companions who came to announce the good news that the last bridge had been repaired, and that they were no longer prisoners. The pretty girl arrived just in time to hear Emerson Dwight say:

"Yes, I found it, and as I believed there was no hope of seeing you before this morning I killed time by writing a reply. C—— joined me just as you stepped upon the piazza, and as that ended all prospect of our having a tete-a-tete I could not resist giving you the wrong paper. I would not part with the other, not even to you. By the way, Rose, we must change the L'Envoi to something like this:

Most precious Rose, you're in a vise,
You're doomed to bridal wreaths and rice."

Wonderful Sagacity of a Dog.

The wonderful sagacity sometimes displayed by the dog in its efforts to save its master is well illustrated by the following true tale of late occurrence: A nine-months-old puppy of the shepherd variety, owned by Farmer Nathaniel Peardon, of Melindy's Prairie, Wis., was sent to bring home a drove of six good-sized hogs that had escaped from their pen, little thinking the dog could accomplish this difficult task. Imagine the farmer's surprise on seeing the puppy bring each hog home, one after the other, in quick succession, leading it by the ear, each trip stopping for his master's approval. Each time the hog refused to advance or seemed inclined to loiter the puppy pulled his ear all the harder, thus compelling him to move on.

IMPRESSIVE GLITTER.

The Metallic Splendor of the Diplomatic Corps on New Year's Morning.

Washington's most picturesque feature, the diplomatic corps, never gets into action until the reception at the white house on New Year's day, says the Indianapolis Journal, although the individual members will be seen out in society for a month or more before the recognized social season. At the New Year's reception, however, the diplomats come out strong and the procession of the members of the foreign legations and embassies from the white house to the home or hotel of the secretary of state, where the diplomatic breakfast is served, is one of the gala sights of the year. Many of the population of Washington stay up all night in order to get a place on the white house fence where they may see the procession pass as soon as it has been received and properly attended to by the president.

After the reception the entire organization lines up and puts out on foot for the home of the secretary of state. As they pass from the white house grounds in their glittering raiment they are the showiest things in Washington and worth coming miles to see. The lowliest attache in the crowd will give cards and spades to the most showily-dressed drum major in the country, and will win out with ease. They have gold lace and bullion strung all over them, while the aigrets, plumes, epaulets, cords, tassels and ribbons of any one legation would stock a millinery store. Such is the effect of this aggregation of beauty and valor on the great American crowd gathered without the gates that every man in it utters at some time while the procession is passing, with contemptuous emphasis, the remark which occurs oftenest in the narrative of the adventures of Chimmie Fadden.

STRANGE STORY OF CRIME.

Trustworthy Servant Turns Murderer—Husband to the Rescue.

One of the most remarkable stories of thwarted crime comes from India. A lady with her two children, who were both young, was going in her own ekka from Rannagar to a place in the center of the Bar tract.

The driver was an old servant of the family and was thought to be trustworthy. For this reason the lady did not think it necessary to leave her jewelry behind her. At a lonely part of the road the trustworthy servant stopped and ordered his mistress to pass her gewgaws along. She did so, not unnaturally, and then the man proceeded to bind her, preparatory to killing her.

At her request he agreed to kill the infants after he had dispatched their mother. He lifted the ax to strike the blow, but the head flew off and disappeared in the brushwood some yards away. By this time the lady was unconscious.

When she came to she found her husband leaning over her and undoing her fastenings. He explained that he had felt a dread as of some impending calamity, and so had followed her. In the thicket the trustworthy servant was found dead, his body already blue, putrid and bloated. He had been stung by a Khagi snake, whose bite paralyzes the victim on the instant and decomposes him in an hour.

VERY FRUGAL PEERS.

Members of the English Peerage Do Not Squander Their Wealth Needlessly.

There is no one in the English peerage who has the reputation of driving a closer bargain and possessing a keener eye to the main chance than the duke of Westminster, says the Brooklyn Citizen. The young duke of Bedford, who runs his grace of Westminster very close in the point of wealth, distinguished himself the other day in the London police court by the animosity which he displayed in prosecuting the poor itinerant venders of fruits and vegetables who had attempted to dispose of their wares in the neighborhood of Covent Garden market, which belongs to him and is one of his principal sources of revenue. He claimed that by hawking their wares on the border line of the market they interfered with those who rented stalls therein from him. And now we have Lord Robarts, the richest peer in the west of England, and possessed of tin mines in Cornwall which alone yield him over $250,000 a year, getting the best of a brother peer, the popular earl of Hardwicke, by foreclosing a mortgage which had hitherto been considered a friendly agreement. Of course, Lord Robarts is within his strict legal rights, but by his altogether unexpected foreclosure he has managed to acquire Wimpole hall, the ancestral mansion and country-seat of the earl of Hardwicke, as well as the large estate in connection therewith, for one-third of the value at which it was officially appraised three or four years ago.

HAS SAVED MANY LIVES.

Wonderful Record in Death Cheating Made by a Sea Captain.

Which boy has saved the greatest number of human lives from drowning? was asked of Tit-Bits by a correspondent, and this was the answer:

Capt. Hans Doxrud, commander of the Red Star steamship Switzerland, trading between Philadelphia and Antwerp, is believed to hold the world's record in this respect, as, while quite young, he saved the lives of 83 persons, rescued from nine sinking ships. Among the boys who lately received rewards from the Royal Humane society for saving life was W. E. Irving, aged 13 years, who, at a great risk, saved the life of a little fellow at Aldermoor, near Coventry, on April 11. This is the second life saved by Irving, who was the recipient of a silver medal in December last. Another boy, Alfred Goodwin, 13, saved a boy of 11 in the Acton waters, near Wormwood Scrubbs; and Fred B. Cooper, a little fellow of 11 years of age, who has only the use of one hand, succeeded, on February 28 last, in rescuing another boy who had fallen through the ice in the recreation ground which runs by the side of the Trent. A few years ago the Royal Humane society awarded a silver medal to Frank Lines, eight years of age, who saved the life of a boy ten years of age who fell through the ice in the Broadwater, Brocket park, Hatfield.

BLISS BOUGHT AT AUCTION.

"Come, Courtney, lend me your ears for half an hour, for I am in a pickle!" exclaimed Fred Sawyer to his friend. "Come up to my quarters. I have something to show you, and—no joking—I need your advice."

"If you take it, it will be for the first time," laughed good-natured Courtney. "Lead on, and don't lose any time in relieving this suspense. I'm not fond of riddles, you know."

"Why, yesterday I dropped into the saleroom at a London station. You know, they sell off the uncalled-for luggage at intervals, and a sale was just going on. A number of the boys were there, and we each commenced to bid for a trunk. I selected a rather small one, and— Here we are! Come right in and view the burden of my woes."

He led the way into a pleasant apartment and pointed to a small leather trunk which stood in the middle of the room.

"Open it, if you want to," he said. "I've had enough of the confounded thing. It's full of woman's stuff, and what do you suppose I can do with it? I haven't an aunt or a cousin in the wide world."

"Keep it till you're married, Fred. These seem to be good clothes," said Courtney, peeping into the box and lifting dainty garments with a half-reverent touch, in spite of his laughing face.

"Humph! The idea of such advice from you! Why, old boy, I shall not marry for ten years—five, anyway—and I'm not going to risk keeping these things here and being taken for a lady burglar. Mrs. McGaffrey would find them in spite of everything—smell murder in the air, and hunt around for the skull bones. No, I'll dump the trunk in the river; that's what I'll do."

"Pshaw! You're too sensible for that. These things cost money—lots of it, I imagine—and you paid something for them in the bargain. You might sell them to the second-hand—No, I've a better scheme than that. Why not go through the trunk systematically, find out the owner's name and address—there are surely letters or something—and write to her, offering her the whole thing for a reasonable sum?"

"Do an act of charity, and yet turn an honest penny Anyone would know you are Scotch. But I must go back to the store, and— Here! you have all the time there is; suppose you go through it for me? Al, I ask is that you will keep Mrs. McGaffrey out. Farewell!" And off he went.

Courtney laughingly locked the door; but the smiles soon left his face as he proceeded with his task. He wondered if the little battered trunk had been lost in some of the dreadful catastrophes he had read of; he imagined the owner killed and her body as well as luggage unidentified in the horrible excitement.

They were girlish things—dainty veils and ribbons, ginghams, silks and snowy linen. He lingered over a small, worn slipper, and felt a thrill akin to that awakened in Cinderella's prince.

"No clew yet," he murmured. "Perhaps there are letters in this box."

Its catch was bent, but he wrenched it open and out flew—his own photograph!

He sat down plump in a box of laces and stared. On the other side were his initials and a date he had been trying for three years to forget: "June 22, 1890."

"Nell Burr's trunk!" he exclaimed. "Oh, my little girl, what has happened to you? Maybe some one—. No, here are your initials on this belt buckle, and your gloves were number six, and this slipper would just fit your dear little foot."

The young man grew excited and rapturous over each article; presently he lifted a package of letters from one corner.

"My own—and they express the greatest happiness life ever brought me. They are like the leaves that flutter down in the November rain. I wonder why she kept them. How many there are!"

Unfastening the cord, he turned the letters over and found many of the envelopes scribbled upon by a familiar hand. There were items jotted down to be remembered in answering, and scraps of poetry which had not long since reached his eye, and been ever since cherished in his memory. Upon the last one—for they were all numbered—was written in ink this girlish confession: "Al Courtney, I love you, but will never marry anyone so inconstant."

Resting his head on the empty tray in silence, he exclaimed:

"I was a fool—a consummate fool—and now, perhaps, she is dead."

A noise outside aroused him, and in a bewildered way he surveyed the garments strewed on every side, and gazed mournfully at the beautiful hat through which he had run one foot, and the box of laces he had unconsciously used for a cushion. Fred would be coming in a few minutes. He began repacking the things with ruthless haste, and, stowing the letters in his own pockets, was lying lazily on the couch reading the paper when his chum entered.

"Well," he cried, "what mystery did you unearth?"

"No mystery at all," was the deliberate answer; but the 'stuff,' as you call it, is worth something, and would be a regular gold mine to a girl. I've a notion to buy it from you and present it to my sisters. What will you take?"

"Oh, come! You're just doing that to help me out. I know your benevolent old heart. No, I'll follow your advice, and hunt up the owner. It would be quite romantic, and, besides, you hinted that I might make a shilling or two by it. You found her name and address there, didn't you?"

"Yes," Al reluctantly answered; "I found her name and an address, but it is hardly likely that you could find her after so many years. You know, they keep luggage a long time before it is sold."

"I'm not sure about that," said Fred. "I've thought about it all the morning and the idea grows on me. It will be rare fun to try, anyway. What did you say the name was?"

"But no doubt this girl was killed—luggage is seldom lost except by some such accident, and maybe she is an old woman."

"Just as if that would make an act of charity less meritorious. Old women don't usually wear white lace hats, though. You must have found something precious in there—jewelry, or something—which makes you anxious to martyrize yourself. It's mine, however, and I'm not as anxious to part with it as I was—not till I've looked through it, anyway."

As he turned the key Al remembered that his own photograph was lying in a conspicuous box, and exclaimed:

"Wait until after dinner, then; I'm a half starved."

"Perhaps it would be better," was the answer, and they passed out together.

When fairly downstairs Al said he had forgotten his handkerchief, and flew back three steps at a time to get it. Securing the picture and placing it in an inside pocket, he said to himself:

"Surely there's nothing else to give me away. But I must wheedle him out of the trunk."

After dinner Fred "went through" the contents of the trunk, making boyish remarks concerning each article as he threw it aside. Al inwardly winced at these remarks, and could scarcely restrain himself from knocking him over on the spot.

"What makes you so crusty?" queried Fred, suddenly, as one of his choicest jokes was met by a gruff "H'm!" "There's no fun in you, and why you want this stuff beats me. Your sisters would turn up their noses at second-hand clothing, if it is pretty. But it isn't worth fussing over, so take it along. No doubt it would prove a white elephant on my hands sooner or later."

Not until the trunk was safely in his room could Al breathe freely; even then it was no easy matter to keep it out of his sisters' sight. They both made a pet and confidant of their one brother, and had a fashion of dropping into his room at all hours to tell him of their schemes and woes. He had pushed the trunk under a mahogany table in the corner, the old-fashioned cover of which reached almost to the floor.

When he told them he was going away for a little business "trip," they beset him with questions and petitions to be taken with him, finally declaring that they would clean house while he was gone, and "sort out his trash."

So behold him, in the dead of night, carrying the "white elephant" up the narrow attic stairs, bumping his head on every rafter and getting cobwebs on his mustache. He covered it with old clothing, pushed a big box in front of it and then crept downstairs, feeling as guilty as if he had been concealing some crime. At breakfast the girls both talked at once about the burglar who tried to get in, and how they pounded on Al's door and could not even get an answer.

At noon he was off, and as the train whirled onward he became possessed with fears. She might not be at Hastings; she might not care for him after these three years; she might even be married or dead.

Arriving at his destination at last, he only stopped to leave his bag at the hotel, and walked rapidly to a familiar house in the suburbs. Ringing the bell he inquired for Miss Burr in a matter-of-fact way, as if he had seen her the day before. He watched the girl's face as he spoke, and saw no trace of surprise. She simply said:

"Miss Burr may not be able to see you, but come in, and I will ask."

Presently he was shown into a small, sunny room, where, on a couch, lay the one girl he had ever loved. He meant to explain at once the cause of his foolish going and eager coming, all of which he had framed into frank, beautiful sentences; but somehow they forsook him, and he fell back on the commonplace. She received him with quiet words of welcome, and then said:

"Pardon my position, but I am such an invalid that it is a trial to sit up."

"An invalid!" he echoed, faintly.

"Yes," she answered. "Did you not hear of my accident several months ago? On coming home from a visit I stopped for a day or so in a London hotel. The building caught fire a few hours after I entered it. The horror of the scene is so stamped — branded would be a more appropriate word—on my memory that I cannot bear to talk of it. I lost everything except the ulster which was wrapped about me, and would have lost my life but for the brave fireman who broke my fall. Oh, no, I am not seriously injured," she continued, in answer to his half-spoken question, "though I have been ill ever since. It was such a shock, you know."

By deft questioning he succeeded in making her say:

"Yes, I lost my trunk. It was left at the station (I expected to go in a day or two), and the deposit ticket was destroyed with my pocketbook. Railway people are necessarily particular about identifying luggage, and for weeks I was too ill to even remember it. Besides, I had only gone for a short outing, and it held nothing of much value, except some keepsakes that were dear to me."

A deep flush stole over her face at these words; he watched it for a delicious moment, and then gathered her up in his arms, exclaiming:

"I will bring them back, if you will pay the reward I want."

Then—or, rather, after he had tortured her impatience mercilessly—he told her of Fred's "bargain" bought at auction. She begged for it, coaxed, pleaded, all in vain. He declared that she could only have the little leather trunk as a wedding present. And a very happy wedding party it was, too.—Tit-Bits.

Saved His Conscience.

The comptroller of the treasury is an autocrat whose decision overrides even that of the chief magistrate of the nation. Some years ago, the then incumbent of the office refused to sign a warrant for money which Gen. Grant thought it proper to expend. "That is right," the president said, "I admire your firmness. Where your conscience is concerned never permit yourself to be coerced. You may consider yourself clear in this affair, for I shall appoint a new comptroller to-morrow."

—The second war with Great Britain began June 18, 1812, and ended on February 17, 1815. It involved the enlistment of 471,622 volunteers and the service of 85,000 regulars, a total of 576,622.

CYCLING THE GLOBE.

The Feat of Riding Around the World on a Bicycle.

How It Is Performed These Days by Wheeling Enthusiasts—Hair Raising Stories Told by the Heroes.

A traveler just back from Japan says that the passengers on the Pacific Mail and Canadian Pacific steamships get much amusement from seeing the marvelous exploits of the daring men and women who are now making their perilous ways around the world on bicycles in great numbers. Every ship takes several of these heroes and heroines. On the way to Asia the passengers do not know the heroes, or even suspect them. As the wheels are stored in the cabin baggage rooms, it is impossible for the rest of the passengers, looking on at a pallid boy who turns ill at the smell of a cigar or a girl who lies next to death's door in her stateroom, to dream that these are the people who are going to write home to the papers that they have been chased by Persian bandits and lunched with Kaffir kings as they annihilated Puck's record round the globe. When the ship stops at Yokohama out come the wheels, and the heroes ride the full length of the Bund—a commercial street about a mile long. The rest of Yokohama is on a hill too steep for wheeling. At Kobe and Nagasaki the town sites are more nearly level and the heroes ride perhaps two miles, having their wheels lifted back aboard the steamer as she voyages from place to place. Having done Japan by going ashore at three points, they forge fearlessly ahead on the steamship, yearning to brave the terrors of China on their flying tires.

China they discover to be one of the finest fields for this phase of reckless deviltry in all the world. The ship takes them to Shanghai, where the Bund is nearly two miles long and all lined with churches, clubs, banks and brokers' and shipping offices—as safe and occidental as Broadway. They hear that they can ride five miles on the Maloo and the Bubbling Well road before they come to the muddy towpaths that form the actual roads of that part of China, along which no wheelman can ride. With their hearts in their throats, fanning every poor devil of a coolie they meet to be a murderer fresh from sacking a missionary's house, they pedal onward. When they come to the tea gardens, whose gateways swarm with Chinese, they all but faint, and could the Chinese dandies and courtesans at these gates read what the bicyclists afterward report of their experiences at the time they would find themselves described as an undisciplined mob of soldiers and lawless retainers in front of a mandarin's palace, with this additional statement: "They scowled so fiercely and made such threatening gestures that only the swiftness of my wheel prevented another massacre being added to the list of crimes against foreigners in China."

Back to the ship the wheeling hero flies and writes notes of his hairbreadth escapes in central China until the vessel passes Woosung and begins to rock him back into seasickness. Hong Kong is the next place at which the bicycle is taken out—a British possession no more to be regarded as dangerous for a foreign lady of the most timid temperament to walk about alone in than is the European republic of Shanghai or the haunt of mountain desperadoes in New Jersey called Tuxedo. So the journey around the world continues—aboard ship with the historic wheel safe in the baggage room and only an occasional chance occurring to take it out in places like Singapore, Aden, Port Said, Alexandria and the rest of the desperate lurking places of European merchants on the way to Europe. Terrible moments are experienced and recorded on the way. For instance, on the Red sea notes are kept of the ferocious character of the inhabitants of the dark continent. On the Mediterranean the ship passes Greece, with its pirates, and Italy, with its banditti, each of which savage and relentless bodies of people is worked into the wheelman's or wheelgirl's diary in such an effective way as to almost make the diarist turn pale as he or she reads over what has been written.

Finally comes Southampton, or Liverpool, or Havre, and there the now world-famous wheel makes its last spin—so that its owner can truthfully say it has "done Europe"—before being hoisted aboard a steamer homeward bound for New York.—N. Y. Sun.

CONCERNING BLOOMERS.

AND again, when the bloomer woman goes into full effect, that deep mystery, the dress skirt pocket, will go out.—Washington Post.

BLOOMERS will never be made the ground for divorce. Wherever the wife wears trousers domestic affairs have reached a settled condition.—Washington Times.

THE difference between ordinary trousers and bloomers is that bloomers do everywhere what ordinary trousers do only at the knees.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

MR. AND MRS. JOHN QUILL had a quarrel over the matter of Miss Maggie Quill wearing bloomers, during which John lost his whiskers and Mrs. Quill was deprived of her alleged reason. This seems all the more strange inasmuch as jonquils are naturally bloomers. Perhaps, after all, they are not so much John Quills as passion flowers.—Boston Herald.

THE late Mrs. Bloomer is receiving posthumous glory to which she is not entitled. The bloomer costume of the woman who wheels is both good to see and comfortable to wear. If the good woman had devised such a costume she might not have been doomed to failure. Father Knickerbocker, however, in application of his name to a costume, gets no more than his fair show.

Cambria Freeman.

EBENSBURG, CAMBRIA CO., PA.

FRIDAY, - - NOVEMBER 29, 1895.

EUGENE V. DEBS, president of the American Railway union, Friday, completed his imprisonment. At Chicago he was received by a crowd of thousands. Some of his followers hugged and kissed him when he stepped from the train.

A REMARKABLE case for damages has developed at Lancaster, Pa., and is attracting great attention. Hotel keeper, O. B. Groff has sued the estate of Abraham G. Brenner for damages, because Brenner committed suicide at his hotel by hanging. It is alleged that the hotel business was injured by reason of the suicide.

THE death sentence of Frank Berchime, of Lackawanna county, was on Wednesday commuted to imprisonment for life. The murderer killed his former sweetheart because she discarded him for another man. Evidence was submitted to the board of pardons to show that the fatal shot had been fired accidentally.

ROBERT MOSEBAY, of Washington county, the murderer of Frank Mosebay, will be hanged February 28 next, Governor Hastings having on Wednesday ordered a warrant to issue fixing that time for the execution of the prisoner. The crime was committed because the deceased was unable to pay $1 he owed the man who killed him.

SENATOR SHERMAN, while in New York a few days ago, was asked if he thought ex-President Harrison was desirous of renomination. Sherman said: "If he is he ought to come out and say so. It was always my plan to let my ambitions be known. I doubt if he can be renominated even if he desires it. I have not seen any strong current of popular sentiment running in his direction. In fact, I never saw that at any time."

AN important decision has been rendered by Judge Hindman, in the district court at Marshalltown, Iowa. The court sustains and makes perpetual the temporary injunction issued in June last, restraining the Soldiers' Home management from withholding any part of the pension money of inmates for the support of the institution. This is the outcome of a case that caused more bitter feeling in the Soldiers' Home, in grand army circles and among ex-soldiers generally than any other disturbing factor.

CONGRESS convenes on Monday next and the lower house will be called upon to decide an exceptionally large number of contests. Notices have been filed from 29 districts among 12 states, of which only two are northern. The contestors are all Republicans. The corrected figures of the house, after the committee on contested seats has passed upon the merits of the contests, will show a Republican membership of 270, and reduce the Democratic membership to 80. This figure may be reduced by three or four, as it is not impossible that two of the North Carolina and another of the Kentucky contests may be allowed.

REPRESENTATIVE RICHARDSON (Democrat,) of Tennessee, has called attention to the remarkable fact that, although the Republicans carried so many states, the official returns of votes cast showed that they had received only about 49 per cent. of the popular vote." He said that "their percentage of the popular vote at the last congress election, when they swept back into power in the house by such a large majority, was even smaller than at the recent election." The majority must rule, as Mr. Reed would say: and in the long run it does. The trouble is that there are so many short runs in American politics in which it doesn't. However, there's compensation in this instance in the thought that the triumphant minority makes up what it lacks in numbers by "superior morality."

IN his annual report, Secretary Morton, makes the clever and agreeable statement that better times for the farmers are just ahead, and the value of land will increase. The farmers will be happy to learn all this and take the secretary at his word. They have been waiting for a turn in the tide for years —something that would bring wheat up to the dollar mark and their broad acres to figure outside those met with at a sheriff's sale, and the chance for improvement is evidently justified by fact. The increase of millions to the population and the demand in foreign markets are the factor in this field of promise for the farmers. Secretary Morton has also set a lesson in economy in expenditures in his department. Out of $5,102,523 appropriated during the past two fiscal years $1,126,268 have been returned to the treasury as the unexpended balance.

NOT many people realize that the United States is spending $10,000,000 a year for the diffusion of literature, yet such is the fact. The postmaster-general reports that two-thirds of all the weight of matter carried in the mails consists not of letters, but of "second class matter"—books, magazines and newspapers—and that the transportation of this second class matter costs about $18,500,000 more than the government gets for it. As the annual deficit in the entire service is about $10,000.000, it is clear that the government is spending a good deal of money in giving the people cheap reading matter. The postmaster-general wants a better definition of second class matter, as there is an abuse in the circulation of books under this class at 1 cent a pound when a single book pays 4 cents an ounce. The low rates was established for the benefit of newspaper subscribers, but other classes of mail matter have obtained the advantage, to which they are not legitimately entitled.

SECRETARY CARLISLE'S speech at the Chamber of commerce banquet in New York did not satisfiy the anticipations of persons who expected he would outline with greater detail the policy to be recommended by the administration on the financial question. Very properly such announcement was reserved for official occasion. But the structure upon which the future financial policy of the country must rest if the credit of the government is to be maintained, no matter upon what party the people shall devolve the responsibility of power, Secretary Carlisle again pointed out with such unshakeable clearness of argument that successful reply is impossible.

So long as the legal tender greenbacks and treasury notes shall be in existence, and so long as the greenbacks shall be made compulsorily reissuable as fast as redeemed, there can be no assurance of safety in our system of finance. It is foily to say that if revenue should become redundant the government would have no difficulty in maintaining its gold reserve. In fact there is at this time redundant revenue in the treasury more than enough, with current receipts, to meet all ordinary expenditures for the next twelve months If there should be added to the present treasury reserve a sum sufficient to provide a gold dollar for every out standing dollar of legal-tender liability in the shape of greenbacks and treasury notes it would only suffice for a single redemption. As soon as the notes should be reissued a new gold liability would be incurred, in payment for which under existing law, the treasury is provided with no means of supply except borrowing.

We remember no instance in our political history when any statesman has been able to make a stronger impression npon the minds of his fellow-citizens of all parties or to render a more notable service to his country than Secretary Carlisle has done in the three or four masterly speeches in which he has discussed the currency question. It is not too much to say that he has seized by the throat the cheap money craze, and has shaken the life out of it. His appeal to the sound money men of both the great parties to boldly face the money iissue by abandoning indirection and equivocation and declaring for a gold standard should not fail. There is no other safe way out of the finaucial bog

THE Philadelphia Bulletin thinks there will be a revision of the tariff by the coming congress, but "on moderate lines," and not "to take the form of another McKinley bill, which might provoke a counter-reaction against the Republican party." This from a high priest of the protection church shows that even the radical protectionists can see something wrong in McKinleyism. The Bulletin warns its party against passing any tariff bill that Cleveland could veto. It is afraid of the veto pen on the tariff question, and with reason. We would like to read Cleveland's veto of the proposed bill taxing the clothing, the blankets and the carpets of the American people and American homes To secure this luxury we hope the Republicans will not crawfish, but will go ahead restoring the McKinley taxes on woolens.

FOUR of the deputy factory inspectors engaged in the inspection of the sweat shop evil in Philadelphia have submitted a joint report to Chief inspector Campbell. They state that work was commenced in July in the Second police district, where most of the sweaters are foreigners. They found the surroundings of the work room foul and in every way unhealthy. Three hundred places in this district were visited and 90 per cent. were found in dwellings and tenement houses, in violation of law. About the same conditions were found in the Third district, where 220 places were visited. Inspectors deem it expedient to enforce the law before giving the sweaters an opportunity to learn its provisions and comply with them.

THE office of road inquiry of the department of agriculture has completed an interesting investigation to the use of common roads of the United States. Returns have been received from about 1,200 counties, showing the average length of haul from farms to markets or shipping points to be 12 miles; the average weight of load for two horses, 2,002 pounds; the average cost per ton per mile, 25 cents, or $3 for the entire haul. Estimating the farm products at 219,824,227 tons in weight, and making estimates on other articles carried over the public roads, it is calculated that the average expense of this transportation in the United States is $946,414,665 per annum.

A FIRE disastrous to life and property, swept through the Dry Goods and Woolen Exchange building at Chicago on last Friday morning. Five firemen in the active discharge of their duty and totally unmindful of danger, were carried through a floor and buried under tons of wreckage from the five floors above. Four of the men lie dead, but the fifth was not seriously injured. One girl fell from a window and received injuries from which she died. A dozen other men women and girls were hurt or overcome by smoke, and many were rescued from imminent death. The property loss to the building and contents, is estimated at $400,000.

Starved to Death.

Mazatlan, Mexico, November, 24.—The dead bodies of five men, two of whom are recognized as being Americans, have been discovered northwest of here, in a wild section of the Sierra Madre mountains. The bodies are supposed to be those of members of a gold prospecting party, who left here several weeks ago. The two Americans were from California, but their names are not known here. The others were Mexicans. It is supposed that the party lost their way in the mountains, and all died together from starvation and exposure.

Washington Letter.

Washington, D. C., Nov., 23, 1895.—Not another bond will be issued by the administration, until the Republican congress has had an opportunity to extricate the treasury from the embarrassment into which it was forced by Republican lgislation This can be accepted as absolutely authentic, even should the demand for gold become much greater than it has been for the past few days. It may not be true that Republicans are trying to force another bond issue before congress meets, but it is trne that they would be glad to see one—a big one—as it would at the same time relieve them of the responsibility of providing for the needs of the treasury and furnish them with a new peg upon which to hang fresh abuse of the administration. It is not a subject for smiles, but it would not be strange if President indulges in a few grim smiles as he pens that portion of his message to congress calling attention to the needs of the treasury. If such language were permissible in so dignified a document as a president's message he might be imagined as writing: "Your party put the treasury in a hole; now the country expects you to at least lend a helping hand towards pulling it out."

It is not a pleasant thing for a Democrat to write nor for Democrats to read, but as nothing is ever gained by dodging the truth it must be said that the spirit of concession which it was expected would exist among prominent members of the party at the beginning of congress is as yet conspicuous by its absence. "Ephraim is wedded to his idols," and, unless the rank and file of the party shall take the bit between their teeth and get together regardless of leaders, there is little prospect of a united Democracy in the next presidential campaign, and nothing but a united Democracy can have even a fighting chance to win. Perhaps some of those who are try to make harmony impossible will on sober second thought change their tactics.

Mr. Frederick C. Waite, of the agricultural department read a paper before a meeting of the National Statistical association, held in Washington this week, which contained some startling figures on the gapid growth of the stay-at home vote in this country. According to those figures, the stay at-home vote in the state of Pennsylvania, at the presidential election of 1888 was only 70,000, while this year it was 610,000; in New York it was 75,000 in '88, 185,000 in 92, 425,000 in '94, and 510,000 this year; in Kentucky it was 55,000 in '88 and 100,000 this year; in Massachusetts, it was 80,000 in '88, 100,000 '92, and 180,000 this year, and in Ohio it was 40,000 in '88, 115,000 in '92 and 180,- this year.

Hon. Carroll D. Wright, U. S. Commissioner of labor, said in the course of a lecture on "The indurtrial development of the New South," at Columbian University: "We will have to be content to keep the negro with us, and we should try to have the best negro possible. This can only be accomplished by education. The whole negro question must be considered on the industrial line. When educated the negroes will be inclined to enter into industries."

Secretary Morton has written the following letter which explains itself: "I hasten to respond to your le ter of inquiry inclosing newspaper clipping relative to the abuse of the franking privilege. No one who knows the Hon. Tom. L. Johnson will for a moment believe him capable of premeditated misuse of the franking privilege. He is a gentlemen of the highest personal integrity, and his public career precludes the possibility of his knowingly doing a wrong thing with public documents or franks. How the bookseller secured the frank of Mr. Johnson I am unable to state, but I am confident that Mr. Johnson himself never authorized any one except his private secretary or clerk to use the said frank. It is true that the book with the frank was bought by an employe of this department at a second-hand book store in this city, but the purchase was made for the particular purpose of showing that the promiscuous and gratuitous distribution of books at the public expense is a fraud upon the treasury, upon the department which prints the documents and upon the post-office department which carries them. The particular person whose frank was placed upon the paid-for public document was a matter of no consequence or significance, except as an illustration of how the franking privilege may be abused if those who have them are permitted to grant powers of attorney for their use."

It seems as though every Republican member of the house who arrives brings a different opinion as to what the Republicans ought to do at the session of congress about to open. All of which shows that the term "wild horses" which Mr. Harrison used to describe the Democratic house of the last congress, is entirely too mild for the menagerie which Mr. Reed is expected to control with one hand, while he uses the other to push his presidential boom. M.

Twelve Sailors Lost.

London,, November 25.—The high northeast gale which set in on Saturday night continues and a large number of vessels on the eastern and southern coasts of England and the French coast have been wrecked. In most cases, however, no lives were lost. The Norwegian ship Isbanden stranded near Yarmouth yesterday and broke up before a fireboat could reach her. An attempt was made to get a line to her by means of rockets, but this failed, and her crew, about a dozen in number perished.

A number of Torbay trawlers were caught in the gale and made for home. While running into the harbor three of them were dashed upon the rocks and one of them sank. Twenty men were seriously injured.

Strangled to Death by Robbers.

Pottsville, Pa., November 23.—Mrs. Catharine Gorman, aged 74 years, was found dead in her room at her home in Mill Creek yesterday, having been strangled to death. The wounds about her neck and head showed plainly that she had had a severe struggle with her slayers. It is believed that the murder was committed by some persons who knew that the old lady kept considerable money about the house. Her purse was found on a table in the room without a penny in it, and the clothing from the closets was strewn about the rooms. The bureau drawers had also been ransacked. It is not known how much money the thieves secured.

Tarred Feathered and Rode on a Rail.

McArthur. O., November 26.—At the fair grounds here Sunday night H. R. Rogers was ridden on a rail and afterwards tarred and feathered. The sheriff arrived and prevented further maltreatment, but advised the victim to take to the woods at once, which he did. Rodger's offense was speaking disrespectfully of a lady scool teacher at this place.

THERE are 21 murderers in the Luzerne county jail.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Deadly Work of Convicts.

Jackson, November 26.—A desperate riot occurred at the State Prison this morning. Deputy-Warden Northrup was struck on the head with a hammer, and is thought to be fatally injured.

Superintendent Coffee, of the shirt factory, was beaten into insensibility with a club, and Foreman Muller slugged with whatever the convicts could lay hands on.

The enraged prisoners also smashed a score of machine- with hammers and iron bars before they were controlled. There were one hundred convicts at work in the shirt factory, but only eighty were concerned in the riot.

The trouble was caused by Foreman Muller threatening to report Dick Huntly, a twenty year man, for not doing his work properly.

Huntly secured a club and, without warning, knocked Muller down. The other officers rushed to the foreman's assistance, when several convicts took a hand and the riot became general, but, on the appearance of armed keepers, prisoners ceased their murderous efforts and were locked in their cells.

Bees Scatter Farmers.

New Hope, Pa., November 25.—Honey bees routed farmers who attended a public sale to-day at William Betts' farm. Among other chattels put at auction were 20 hives of bees. Auctioneer Elias Eastburn warned the 700 people present to inspect the hives with a telescope. Several farmers said they knew a thing or two about bees that perhaps the auctioneer didn't, and the hives were mildly jostled to show that they meant what they said. A bee won't stand shoving, and these Bucks county honey producers can get through any crowd without being squeezed. Edward Louden lifted one of the hives, and a minute later he wished he hadn't. The swarm poured forth and scattered that crowd of farmers in a jiffy. A detachment of the tiny warriors sought a warm retreat in James Little's hair. That gentleman didn't wait to say goodbye to his friends, but leaped a fence and darted across a cow pasture at a gallop.

It took half an hour to get the crowd together again, and the bee hives were sold at long range.

Miner Kills Himself.

Scranton, November 25.—Zere Robbins, aged 30, a well known miner, residing in the borough of Troop, adjacent to this city, shattered the skull of his wife with a revolver bullet at 4 o'clock this afternoon and then shot and killed himself. His wife, who is aged 46, was brought to Lackawanna hospital, this city, but cannot recover.

Robbins and his wife quarrelled over her alleged intimacy with Robert Brown two months ago and separated. He thretened her life at that time. To day Robbins visited his wife's house and before entering called out that he would shoot whoever followed him inside. Robert Brown was among the crowd that at once collected and when Robbins saw him he rushed out and fired two shots at Brown, which went wide of the mark. Brown having taken to his heels. Robbins then re entered the house and shot his wife, came out again and killed himself on the doorstep, after exclaiming, "Now boys, here goes for myself."

Dead Man in a Boat.

Paris, Texas, November 25.—Federal officials received a telegram from Arthur City, I. T., last night, stating that a boat had been discovered adrift upon Red river, the sole living occupant of which was a half famished and vicious dog.

A party of citizens secured a skiff and pulled alongside the derelict and were horrified to find the deck of the craft covered with blood and the body of a man stretched across the thwarts. The head had been all but severed from the trunk and the boat bore marks of a terrible struggle. Owing to the swiftness of the current and the belligerency of the dog, the party were unable to secure the boat. Points lower down the river have been notified and Deputy Marshalls dispatched to intercept the mysterious craft.

An Insane Judge.

Trenton, November 23 —Judge John A. McGrath, of the Second district court, Jersey City, who was in his place on the bench as usual yesterday morning, was brought to the state asylum for the insane last night in charge of two constables. When the judge opened court he behaved irrationally, as he had done for two days previous. The chief of police got the judge into his office and the necessary papers were signed by the doctors and members of his family for his committment to the asylum. Judge McGrath has been a prominent man in Jersey City for many years. Besides his judicial position he is attorney to the county council and a trustee for considerable property. For many years he was a member of the board o education. He served with distinction in the war.

Chinese Rebels Win.

London, November 24.—A dispatch from Shanghai says that the rebels have defeated the Chinese army at Haiao, and the rebels are now masters of half the province of Kansuh.

The rebellion in the province of Kansuh commenced about the time of the defeat of the Chinese by the Japanese, the Imperial army being routed by the insurgents, who captured 11 cities. The government at Pekin even went so far as to discuss the wisdom of an appeal to Russia for aid in suppressing the insurrection. Kansuh is the most northwesterly province of China, and is bounded on three sides of Mongolia. Reports received from various sources indicate that the Mohammedans, who are continually quarreling with the followers of Confucius and Buddha, are responsible for the insurrection.

Circus Consolidation.

New York, November 26 —A few days ago it was stated, and denied, that the Sells Brothers had consolidated with the Barnum & Bailey show. The real deal was the constldation of the Sells Brothers and Forepaugh shows. This gives Mr. Bailey an interest enabling him to control three of the greatest shows in the world. This deal has been impending for a long time past, and it has been a matter of great concern to circus people throughout the country. The terms of the deal have not been made public.

New York Fashion Letter.

The utility of the tailor made gown for every day wear has established it as a part of every well dressed woman's outfit. The full skirt is plain and the jacket is usually made with short ripple back, and strapped seams. These skirts are not interlined, but are finished with a narrow stiff facing around the bottom. All varieties of fancy silk waists are again the rage, but the new velvet blouses are the most popular of all, and velvet for entire gown is much in vogue. It is not always silk velvet; but velveteen in stripes, plaids and figures are variously employed. The newest outside garments are very much trimmed, sometimes entirely with braiding or passementerie and often with fur, principally with Sable and Persian fur trimmings. The old fashion of using jet embroidery velvet is one of the most popular fancies of the Winter. A trimming of velvet is a necessary part of every out-door as well as in-door garment, and a vest of some bright colored velvet tends to lighten charmingly a dark cloth jacket. The lining for the coats and capes is very gorgeous. The richest brocades and satins in the newest designs being employed. Some of the newest capes have high side collars faced with real antique lace. There are gorgeous mantles that reach from the neck to the hem of the gown for opera and carriage wear.

In the latest numbers of the Fashion Magazines published by A. McDowell & Co., are a large variety of these latest styles. These periodicals are always very attractive and are constantly increasing in popularity. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost $3.50 each per year or 35 cents a copy. The "French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum or 30 cents a copy, and "La Mode" $1.50 per year or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute, but apply by mail to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th street, New York.

When the Chill Mists of the Morning

Hang like a pall over the surface of the earth, it will be well for you before venturing into the raw vaporous air, charged, perhaps, with the seeds of malaria or provocative of rheumatic twinges, to take a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and thus shield yourself from atmospheric influences threatening to health. If you happen to get snowed, sleeted or rained upon, use the same preventative, and avoid the rheumatism, or a dangerous cold. The agreeable warmth infused into the circulation by this genial stomachic, its invigorating and regulating properties commend it to all appreciative of the fact that prevention is better than cure. Use the Bitters for dyspepsia, billousness, nervousness and kidney trouble, sick headache and debility.

The goods and salesman are never seen again, but the farmers note turns up at a bank.

—The following is from the Pittsburg Times of Saturday: "John Pitcairn, president of the Pittsburg & Eastern railroad, returned to Philadelphia last night, after making two positive statements regarding the new road. He said that 12 miles of track would be finished by January 1, and that the road would actually come into Pittsburg and have terminal facilities here instead of making a traffic arrangement with the Vanderbilt or other line."

—Carl Schroder, a German residing near Parnassus, Westmoreland county, committed suicide on Thursday of last week by hanging himself on a tree on a hill back of his home. The act is ascribed to a fit of melancholia. For seventeen years he had been a grave digger at the Zimmerman cemetery, Pittsburg. His wife saw some object hanging to a tree, and when a farm hand thought it useless to investigate, she herself made the sad discovery. Deceased was aged sixty-two years.

—A very "seedy" looking tramp, answering to the name of Jules Chabert, undertook to wreck the passenger train on the Cresson & Coalport railroad on Thursday evening of last week by placing some cross-ties on the track about one-half mile north of Fallen Timber. Division Foreman Stiffler was notified, search was made, and the offender now rests behind the bars, after confessing the crime. He is thought to be insane.

—The Johnstown Democrat of Tuesday announces that a deal has been closed whereby an electric moter manufacturing company will at once remove to Johnstown and occupy the abandoned part of the Johnson Company steel plant provided the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will build a spur to the works and thus remove a charge of $2 a car as now handled. The city secured the right to the Johnson Company some months ago, but the Pennsylvania Company has not yet built the spur or shown any disposition to do so.

—The dairy and food commissioner finds that pretty nearly everything we eat is adulterated. Maple sugar is made out of three cent sugar, buckwheat is made from coarse wheat flour, which is cheaper, pepper, mustard, vinegar, cocoa, cheese, butter and pretty much every food employed on the everyday table is found to be adulterated so that a man does not know when he is eating pure stuff. About the only thing we eat that has not yet found to be adulterated is the humble fruit of the hen—the egg cannot be successfully imitated.

—Nicholas Clark, 65 years old, a bachelor and shoemaker, and a quiet, honest and peaceable resident of Mahaffey, was beaten and dragged out of his shop on Tuesday night by a half-drunken tough named Howard Dayton, a railroad laborer. Clark was picked up by a friend and taken care of, but died the next morning. Dayton went to his lodging house, and tried to escape when he found that Clark died, but is now locked up. His excuse for beating Clark was that he had abused him by talking to him. Citizens are indignant, and talk of lynching.

—William Gahagen, of Somerset county, was in town Monday, bringing with him a couple of fine deer, which he bagged on Friday on Bald hill, in Shade township. He was out hunting with James Mauger, and besides the deer he killed a big wildcat that ventured across his path. Mr. Gahagen was as proud as a peacock of his prowess, and he is now wearing a waving plume in his cap.—Johnstown Democrat.

—By an act passed by the last legislature and approved the 18th day of June, 1895, it is made unlawful for any one, but near adult relatives, to attend the funeral of any person who has died of cholera, small pox, yellow fever, typhus fever, diphtheria, diphtheric croup, membranous croup or leprosy. In addition to the immediate adult relatives of the deceased, a sufficient number of pall bearers may be in attendance.

—A large portable saw mill owned by Marks & Campbell and situated near Laughlinstown, Ligonier township, Westmoreland county, was completely destroyed Friday by the boiler exploding. John Clark, a young teamster, single, of Ligonier township, was instantly killed. A piece of boiler struck him, tearing off the top of his head, also one foot, besides cutting him almost in two. Martin Campbell, one of the owners, had his skull fractured, besides being otherwise seriously injured, but hopes are had for his recoverv. Aaron Marks, another owner, was considerably cut about the face as well as being hurt otherwise. The mill is a total wreck. The explosion was due to the bad condition of the boiler.

—William Murray, one of Altoona's oldest and best known citizens, died suddenly at his home in that city on Monday morning about half past seven o'clock, aged about 75 years. The deceased was a native of Scotland and when he first came to this country in 1842 settled at Summerhill, in this county, where he spent a number of years engaged in merchandising. In 1850 he removed to Altoona where he established the mercantile house of William Murray, Son & Co. He is survived by his wife, who is a daughter of Elisha Plummer, deceased, a well-known citizen of Summerhill, and by his two sons, Gideon and William W., Jr., and one daughter, Mrs. George A. Houser, of Altoona. His remains were interred in Fairview cemetery on Wednesday afternoon.

—On Friday last William Robinson, of Madera, Clearfield county, hired a two-horse rig from John Westover, liveryman, at Hastings, to be returned in four hours. He went to Kylertown, Clearfield county, where he sold the horses and rig to Druggist Ames at that place and obtained $10 in cash and a gold watch said to be worth $30. From that place he hired a rig and driver and drove to Philipsburg. From Philipsburg he hired another rig which carried him to Tyrone. On Sunday morning he went to the livery stable of Ben Shollenberger at the latter place with the statement that he was hunting a horse thief, and his statement of identification tallied strangely with the party giving information. From Tyrone he went to Huntingdon where he was arrested by Officer Westrook. He was taken to Hastings where he was given a hearing and held to answer for his shortcomings.

Women on School Boards.

Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, superintendent of public instruction, is a strong advocate of women on school boards. He says the office of dirictor is one of fitness and if woman is more fit for the place than man she ought to replace him. On the other side of the Atlantic woman has shown that she is superior to man in her fitness for the office.

Dr. Schaeffer believes that man is too prone to neglect the comforts of the school house, while on the other hand the woman is the more observant of the needs of children. He has the first district to find in Pennsylvania where women are members of the school board that it is possible to talk of the "slaughter of innocents." He claims it is better to consult the women in the curriculum and grading of the school, and if he had his own way he would put several women on each school board in the state. From long experiance and careful observation Dr. Schaeffer believes that we are taking a great step forward when we place women on school boards.

A Former Ebensburg Family Robbed.

On Monday morning about 3 o'clock the residence of Mr. P. A. Schwab, of Altoona, was entered by burglars, who gained admittance by forcing a kitchen window. Mr. Schwab heard the noise down stairs, but thought at first that it was made by his son. Later he got up to investigate, though meanwhile the marauders had come up stairs. When Mr. Schwab passed down stairs they leaped from a second story window and escaped.

The robbers secured a pocketbook containing $9 and some valuable jewelry belonging to Mrs. Schwab, who feels her loss keenly, for the reason that the jewelry belonged to her mother. Mr. Schwab's trousers were found lying on the back porch with the pockets turned inside out. He had, however, removed a large sum of money from his pockets and placed it under his pillow previous to retiring. The robbery was reported to the police, but as yet no arrests have been made.

Collided With a Handcar.

As the Altoona and Philipsburg passenger train, due at Philipsburg at 6:30 on Wednesday evening, emerged from Steiner's cut, one mile from the latter place, it struck and completely wrecked a handcar containing five persons. The occupants of the car were T. J. McDermott and wife and John Richmond, wife and daughter. McDermott was instantly killed and Mrs. McDermott slightly injured about the shoulder and arm. Richmond was injured about the head, as was also his daughter and Mrs. Richmond received fatal injuries about the head.

The occupants of the handcar were residents of Dunbar. No blame is attached to anyone. The passenger train was running on schedule time. McDermott and Richmond were both railroad men.

The Largest Oak Board.

The largest oak board ever sawed was ripped from the body of a mammoth tree which formerly stood near Scottsburg, Ind. The tree was 27 feet in circumference, and was said to be largest perfectly round oak in the state. It was purchased by H. Herman, the New York lumber dealer, for the sum of $75, and was cut down and sawed into boards. The largest of these boards was 10 inches thick, 5 feet 2½ inches wide at the butt and 5 feet exactly at the top. It was 35 feet long, and required the combined strength of two yoke of oxen and eight horses a whole day to move it 1½ miles on a "broad tread" wagon from the sawmill to the depot. Lumbermen say that this was the largest oak board ever sawed in America.—St Louis Republic.

About a Fence.

The citizens of Summerhill and the Pennsylvania Railroad company are having quite a tilt over the erection of a fence in the borough of Summerhill. On Tuesday a number of employes of the railroad company proceeded to erect a high fence around the company's property there and in doing so closed up a road that the citizens claim is a public highway. A number of citizens went to work and tore down the fence. A number of warrants were issued on both sides.

Later both sides appealed to the courts and injunctions have been issued which cause a temporary lull in the proceedings.

Ward Gives Himself Up.

John Ward, of Barnesboro, who is charged with giving Lizzie Dugan, of Wilmore, the drug that caused her death, and for whom a warrant was issued, as mentioned in last week's FREEMAN, walked into the sheriff's office in this place on Saturday morning and gave himself up to Sheriff Coulter, who at once notified District Attorney Murphy, and locked Ward up.

Ward is a young man who for some time past has been employed at Spangler. The Spangler Sentinel of last week has this to say in regard to the accused. "Ward was in the employ of McClain & Co., of this place, for several months, and for a few days before his disappearance in the employ of the Bargain Wonder Store, at Barnesboro. He was considered by his acquaintances as an excellent young man, of sober, industrious habits. He is proficient in the use of the English, Slavish, Italian and German languages, and the people of this community were shocked at the recent developments. His father—James Ward—an excellent gentleman, is foreman of the Kettle Creek mines, at Bitumin, Clinton county. Many believe Ward to be the victim of advice given by bad associates."

On Monday morning Sheriff Coulter took Ward to Johnstown for the purpose of having a hearing before Alderman Royer, of the Fifth ward of that city, before whom the information was made. William H. Sechler, Esq., who has been employed for the defense, accompanied them to that city. On their arrival there the defendant waived a hearing and on Monday evening was again brought back to jail.

DENTISTRY.

Do you know we are taking out teeth every day without one particle of pain?

Well, we are doing this very thing with "Odontunder," the only local anaesthetic that has stood the test and to-day it is the only one that is used universally by dentists who are up to date in their calling.

The price for "Odontunder" when painless is 50 cents, but if you experience the least pain, we only charge you the usual price, 25 cents.

How about those teeth that need filling? Well, you say they don't ache. That's just the reason why you should have them filled now. After they have ached once you will probably have to have the nerve killed and the tooth treated if you are desirous of saving it. I only charge 50 cents for amalgum fillings and from $1.00 up for gold fillings. These are hard-time prices but they go just the same. Why procrastinate?—that's a big word but it's a good one right here because procrastination means to the patient loss of sleep, neuralgia, ear-ache, tooth-ache and goodness knows what else. We know of a good many young ladies of our acquaintance who would have been married long ago if it hadn't been for those horrid-looking teeth. Remember, to every patient having teeth filled I give a box of Dr. Richards' tooth powder and full instructions for the care of the teeth. On the 13th of each month I will extract teeth free of charge. You say why on the 13th. Well, now, that's my business. All you have to do is to come. Remember I won't take out your good teeth, because I don't believe in it. Then you say suppose the 13th falls on Sunday. Come right along and we will be only too glad to relieve you of the offending member.

THE STORM'S RAVAGES

Much Havoc In a Large Section of Country.

FEARFUL WEATHER ON THE LAKES.

Very Few Vessels Out at This Season, or Many Would Have Been Wrecked. Great Damage Was Done In Ohio and Other States.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—The storm in this section was the worst in years. It was remarkable from the fact that almost no fatalities occurred. Buildings in this city were stripped of everything the wind could catch. The weather was terrible on the great lakes, but as few vessels are out at this season of the year comparatively little damage has been done. The telegraph and telephone service has been badly crippled throughout the country.

Dispatches received here show the same state of affairs throughout Illinois. Quincy reports a howling blizzard with snow falling fast, impeding street and railroad traffic. Telegraph and telephone wires are down in all directions. Peoria says storm still raging and serious damage is feared. At Fairbury, Ills., sleet caused considerable damage. August Guenther fell and received probably fatal injuries.

The steamer J. Emery Owen ran aground with her two consorts, the schooners Michigan and Nicholson, off Glencoe. Just how the pilot lost his bearing is not yet known, but was undoubtedly due to a blinding snowstorm. In all there were between 50 and 75 people on board the three vessels, a large majority of them, however, being on the steamer.

Signals of distress were at once given but it was not until after daylight that they were seen and answered. Great delay was caused by the wrecking of a boat from Evanston a few minutes after it was launched. Another boat was soon secured, and all on board were saved.

LOUISVILLE—No loss of life has been reported as a result of the gale, but much damage was done along the Ohio river towns in Kentucky and Indiana. In Louisville several residences were unroofed, chimneys were leveled and awnings and signs demolished, but across the river the damage was more severe. At Jeffersonville many barns were wrecked and along Front street residences were unroofed and windows blown in.

At Arctic Springs, Captain Hoffman's coal fleet was wrecked and two of his doddlers sunk. Three shanty boats at Port Fulton were sunk and Captain Duffy's coal fleet was torn from its moorings and 25 empty coal boats lost. Several men on the various coal boats narrowly escaped death, being rescued by small skiffs.

At Utica, Ind., the residence of William Hooper was entirely demolished, but the family escaped injury. A family on board a wrecked shanty boat at Utica narrowly escaped with their lives.

At Bird's Eye, Ind., many roofs were blown off by the storm, and at Franklin, Ind., the wind wrecked the new City hall. Loss, $15,000.

BUFFALO—The damage to various kinds of property by the storm has been very great, but no fatalities have occurred. Most of the loss has been due to the high water in the harbor, caused by the prevailing direction of the wind. The water in the harbor and river has risen at least six feet, damaging railroad tracks and delaying trains. The $40,000 side-wheel excursion steamer Shrewsbury was washed away from the supports on which it was placed and beached. The tug Elk was sunk by the large freight steamer Syracuse in a collision which occurred at the foot of Commercial street. Several persons have been injured by flying objects, but none fatally.

DETROIT—The gale here wrecked chimneys, plate glass windows, signs and trees in all parts of the city. No serious damage was done, however, and as as yet no marine disasters have been reported.

THE STORM IN OHIO.

Much Damage Done Throughout the Entire State.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 27.—Later reports show that the damage done by the storm in this city will foot up to many thousands of dollars.

The roof of Music hall, one of the largest structures in the city, was loosened and many buildings wrecked. The roof of a shed fell upon John Zimmerman of No. 19 Marquard street, injuring him so badly that he will probably die.

Special dispatches from the Ohio fields show that hundreds of oil derricks were blown down and general havoc wrought throughout the entire section. The loss will be very heavy.

PUT-IN-BAY—The roof of V. Doller's store, the parapets of the town hall and the front of the museum were blown off by the gale. A deck hand of the steamer Messenger, known as "Reddy," was found drowned in Fox's dock here. He was blown from the dock during the night. A Toledo sandsucker dragged her anchor and lies in the channel between here and Middle Bass island. Two men are aboard. It is feared they will be lost.

BOWLING GREEN—Buildings were unroofed by the storm here, plate glass broken, chimneys blown down and the streets are strewn with debris. The loss will reach about $10,000. In the oil fields, for a distance of eight miles, not half a dozen derricks are standing. The loss will probably reach $30,000. Farmers report much stock killed.

LORAIN—The new St. Mary's Catholic church was badly wrecked by the storm. It was at this church that the temporary floor fell at the laying of the cornerstone two months ago and 40 people were injured. All the siding was blown off one side of the Harrows mill.

AKRON—The tin roof of the Akron cereal mill was torn off and thrown into the street by the storm here. A large tree crashed through the bay window into the residence of ex-Governor Edgerton.

CINCINNATI—The storm did far more damage than was thought on the river. The John K. Speed was torn from her landing and blown a mile up stream. The Buckeye State was also blown a good piece. The O'Connell was torn from the bank, dashed to the middle of the river, then back to the Ohio side and shored. The Rob Roy went out at the same time and has not since been seen. The Hercules Carrel was blown ashore. Several coal barges were sunk. The H. K. Bedford cams nearly being sunk with a number of passengers aboard.

TOLEDO—The storm here played havoc with telegraph and telephone wires. The streets today were strewn with signs and rubbish. Tin roofs were blown off and the standing walls of a large building recently destroyed by fire were blown down. No disasters have been reported from the lake as yet.

LIMA—The storm blew down thousands of oil derricks and caused other damage amounting to several hundred thousand dollars. No lives reported lost.

COLUMBUS—The North Congregational church, in North Columbus, in course of construction, was totally demolished by the storm, and at the Panhandle railroad shops great havoc was created, buildings being moved from their foundations and in some cases demolished.

THE STORM IN PENNSYLVANIA

Fierce Along the Lakes, But Minor Damage Done Elsewhere.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 27.—The storm did considerable damage here. Signs and awnings were blown down and pedestrians were kept busy protecting themselves from the fierce blasts or chasing their wandering headgears as they were blowing along the pavements. Minor damage was done to considerable property.

The highest velocity reached by the wind in the city was 52 miles an hour. The storm brought with it a large quantity of rain, but for the reason that it shifted somewhat toward the north, Pittsburg and vicinity did not get as large a rainfall as other points. Along the Mississippi valley and through the upper Allegheny there was a large fall of more than an inch, while here it was .39 of an inch.

Comparatively small damage was done throughout Western Pennsylvania. At Erie and other points along the lake the gale was terrific in its fierceness, and a good deal of damage was done to shipping.

THE WALLER CASE.

The Kansas Delegation Will Ask For More Determined Action.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The Kansas congressional delegation, as soon as possible after the Fifty-fourth congress begins, will introduce resolutions in both houses looking to an investigation of the circumstances connected with the arrest and imprisonment of ex-Consul Waller.

The members of the delegation take the position that the United States is entitled to the record of the trial as a matter of right, and, therefore, should not ask it as an act of comity. The probabilities are that they will attempt to secure the passage of a resolution instructing the government to stand by its demand for the document. The first resolution, however, only will call for the correspondence in the case.

COMMANDED TO KILL.

Turkish Officers Told Soldiers to Massacre Armenians.

CONVINCING EVIDENCE SECURED.

An English Newspaper Correspondent Overheard Turkish Soldiers Talking About the Order—Extra Gunboats May Pass the Dardanelles.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—The Times this morning publishes an article written at Erzeroum, dated Nov. 9. The correspondent says: "The massacre here certainly occurred by the order of the authorities and this order must have emanated originally from the central authorities at Constantinople. Much circumstantial evidence can be produced to corroborate this statement."

The correspondent of The Times, writing from Erzeroum, then proceeds to repeat a conversation which he overheard going on between the Turkish soldiers who were guarding his door. Their statements were to the effect that their officers had ordered them at a given signal to massacre the Armenians. The correspondent then continues:

"I had been visiting at the British consulate with Mr. Chambers Sunday afternoon, Nov. 3, when the new outbreak took place. The Armenians again crowded to the American school. A number of persons were killed on this day, the estimates ranging from 18 to 35. The scenes in the cemeteries where the victims have been buried by the sufferers have been heartrending. On Nov. 7 I visited all of the ruined bazars, going as far as Serai, but during the entire journey I did not see a single Christian."

A Constantinople special says: The ambassadors will hold another formal meeting in order to decide what steps to take to put an end to the so-called "shuffling" of the porte.

The impression prevails that if the firmans are not very soon granted the extra gunboats will pass the Dardanelles without the porte's permission, even if they have to be conveyed through by battleships stripped for action.

Indeed, nobody here can see how the powers can retreat from the position they have assumed without serious loss of prestige, especially as their demands are based on treaty rights, which are admitted by the sultan and his advisers. In some quarters it is said that the sultan's objection to granting the firmans is really caused by his belief that he can do so with impunity, in view of the objection raised by Russia to Austria's proposal in the subject, and that this constituted a difference of opinion among the powers.

A number of thediplomatic corps to whom this view of the affair was submitted said that if the sultan actually thought there was any material difference of opinion among the powers he would do well to get rid of that belief as soon as possible.

JACKSON, Mich., Nov. 27.—A desperate riot has occurred at the state prison. Deputy Warden Northrup was struck on the head with a hammer and is thought to be fatall injured. Superintendent Coffee of the shirt factory was beaten into insensibility with a club, and Foreman Miller slugged with whatever the convicts could lay hands on. The enraged prisoners also smashed a score of machines with hammers and iron bars before they were controlled.

There were 100 convicts at work in the shirt fa tory, but only eight were concerned in the riot. The trouble was caused by Foreman Miller threatening to report Dick Huntley, a 20-year man, for not doing his work properly. Huntley secured a club and without warning knocked Miller down. The other officers rushed to the foreman's assistance, when several convicts took a hand and the riot became general, but on the appearance of armed keepers the prisoners ceased their murderous efforts and were locked in their cells.

COAL MOVING SOUTH.

10,000,000 Bushels to Leave Pittsburg Today.

35,000,000 BUSHELS IN HARBOR.

Pilots Scarce and Holding Off For More Pay—Roustabouts Hard to Get—Every Available Boat Pressed Into Service. General News of the State.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 27.—The rise in the river will reach 10 feet by tonight. It is safe to say that every available steamer that can be gotten to Pittsburg will be sent out with tows of coal. There are 35,000,000 bushels in the harbor to be moved southward.

More than 50 tows will get out, and it is estimated that 72 steamers will be in the business before the week is over. All the idle boats at points as far as Cincinnati have been telegraphed for to come up the river and meet tows going down and change, so as to allow the other boats to come back for more. There are not enough pilots in the harbor to man all the fleets, and many of those not regularly employed are holding out for higher prices.

The pilot is paid from $150 to $175 for a trip to Cincinnati and about $200 to Louisville. Many of the pilots think that $250 will be offered in a few days, and as a result they are holding back. There is also a scarcity of roustabouts, and the usual influx of farmers can be seen on the wharf anxious to become sailors.

The tows will average 15 barges or light boats, with about 18,500 bushels of coal to the barge, and it will require an average of 25 men to a tow.

Gray's iron line will carry a valuable cargo of iron to Cairo for the Carnegie company. Twelve barges containing rails, costing $240,000, is preparing to leave with the tide.
